The United Nations: Success or Failure in Maintaining Peace and Security?

By Labeeb Ahmad

"In spite of terror attack holding a portion o significance since the formation of the United Nations, the first serious moves against the threat of the terrorism were made in the form of multiple Security Council resolutions following 9/11. These resolutions urged member states to clamp down on terrorist activity by suppressing the financial sources of terrorist organizations, denying them safe havens, detecting and restricting recruitment efforts, and prioritizing the sharing of security intelligence in the international community."
